In February 2015, CheapAir.com became the first website to book flights between the U.S. and Cuba. Today it is the first online travel agency to book direct flights between Los Angeles and Havana (Cuba). In recent months, nearly 40 flights between Havana and Miami have sold out. West Coast residents, however, had no opportunity to fly non-stop to Cuba.

To fly non-stop from Los Angeles to Havana, Cuba, travelers have to select one of 12 government-approved reasons to visit the country. On CheapAir.com, "Educational activities" is the most popular reason for travel to Cuba and year-to-date has been selected by 27 % of travelers. "Professional research and professional meetings" (23 %) takes a close second place followed by "Family visits" (14 %).

Jeff Klee, CEO of CheapAir, said 'It's still one of the few places in the world that is, relatively, untouched by American culture and businesses. Cuba is now a short flight away but it's a different world. We continue adding flights to Cuba so that everyone who is permitted to travel there can quickly, easily, and affordably arrange flights.'
